World Food Day Colloquium 2022

Back to the roots - Basic sciences for sustainable development

Tuesday, October 18th, 2022 | 13:00 - 18:00 | Balcony Room

The Food Security Center and the Hans-Ruthenberg-Institute of the University of Hohenheim invite you to save the date for the World Food Day Colloquium (WFDC) 2022 "Back to the roots - Basic sciences for sustainable development" on Tuesday, October 18th, 2022.

The focus of this year's WFDC will be the linkage of basic sciences, fundamental understanding of nature and the achievement of the Sustainable Development Goals. According to the United Nations, basic sciences provide the essential means to face major challenges, such as universal access to food.

Among the highlights of this year's WFDC will be the presentation of the annual Global Hunger Index report by Welthungerhilfe, and the Justus von Liebig Award for World Nutrition by the Foundation fiat panis. Also, our keynote speakers will present their perspectives on how basic sciences and emerging technologies can respond to the needs of the growing global population by enabling sustainable food production, providing access to information and improving food security among individuals, communities, and societies.

Through a Young Scientist Session, the WFDC will also offer a unique opportunity for young researchers to give insights into their work, showing us how basic sciences are vital for advances in agriculture and food security in different cultural and geographical contexts.

Following two years of virtual meetings, we are happy to finally meet in person again for this year's WFDC. Join us on Tuesday, October 18th, 2022 at 13:00 (CET) in the Balcony Room at the Hohenheim Palace. The event will also be streamed live. Stay tuned to our website for registration and further information: www.foodsecurity.de
